The facilitators were friendly, warm and attentive to all the students needs.

The instructors offered a fantastic opportunity for children to develop their motor skills, coordination, and confidence in a fun and supportive environment.

This was a new initiative for our school and as with all new initiatives we are never sure how they will go. I was really happy with the outcome and the way that it was accessible for students of varying abilities.

Overall, the students were engaged, motivated, and proud of their progress, it was a very valuable experience for their learning and well-being.

Beyond the physical benefits, it was a great way to encourage turn-taking, cooperation, and peer encouragement, which strengthened classroom relationships.

This promoted physical activity and outdoor learning, helping students build resilience, perseverance, and spatial awareness.

Many students who were initially hesitant gained independence and pride in their achievements, especially those learning to ride without training wheels.
